Dear Readers,

We live in a fast moving city and society. I appreciate times when life slows down. I wouldn't want life always to run slowly, however, the slower moments of life feel good.

In earlier days loitering to and from school, then as a mum returning from the school run, minutes at the bus stop waiting and wandering in my mind, trips to and from anywhere and everywhere on my bicycle. Nowadays, with a little more time of my own, time to stand and stare, time to wander round our neighbourhood, meander round our garden.

All these moments provide time when the mind can ponder a knotty problem, or simply be at rest.

I am building a cairn, pebbles picked up from near and far, a reminder of problems solved and situations for which there are no solutions which I have simply learned to accept.

It is enjoyable to lose myself in the paintings and ceramics in our art gallery. I appreciate time to relax into the beauty of landscape, to ponder faces of family and friends and to remember their creator.

Sincerely yours,
Elisa Main (Editor of Outlook)
